

British forces take Charleston in May of 1780 and push into the upper regions of South Carolina. Settlers loyal to the king are emboldened to organize against those they consider rebels in their communities. For years they have suffered under the bullying tactics of the Liberty men and they now feel it's time to rise back up as true subjects of the Crown. Despite being challenged and defeated at Ramsour's Mill, they are determined to re-establish British rule. A civil war erupts in the backcountry as neighbor fights against neighbor.

Loyalist Captain Patrick Moore and his men have been especially interested in raiding the rebel homesteads. Their reputation has come to the attention of the Patriot leaders. Patrick Moore and his dangerous men must be stopped.

The borderlands of South Carolina and North Carolina, west of the Broad River.

Nuckoll's Farm, early summer 1780.

Patriot militia spot British Loyalist Captain Patrick Moore and decide to arrest him.

That's them!

Let's do it!

Charge!

You're coming with us!

I don't think so! Umph!

Ow! My Thumb!

CRACK! WHAP! WHAM!

I've had enough of this! Now get moving!

THUD!

You've got me! I give up!

Captain, we'll put an end to these raids on our friends, one way or another!

What're you going to do with me?

I'm taking you back as a prisoner.

Fort Thicketty

They've made a lot of progress since we've been gone.

It looks solid.

Sir, we've been gathering a good supply of weapons and ammunition.

They're cutting the trees for the abattis. I think it'll be completed in the next day or so.

Excellent!

We want a clear field of fire all around. It doesn't work if the enemy can hide behind stuff.

We'll be able to hold off whatever they throw against us.

We're getting a British sergeant from Fort Ninety-Six. This will be our staging area.

Our loyalist friends will love this.

Ma'am, it looks good! We'll get back our country yet!

I hope so!

Captain, we have a couple more foraging parties going out in the morning.

Very well. Make sure the men put the fear in our rebel neighbors!.

Yes, Sir.

Our army is growing. I'm getting excited about our chances.

I think you're right. It's a shame we lost some momentum at Ramsour's Mill.

Time. We just need a little time.

And luck!
