

Patriot Brigadier General Daniel Morgan has won a significant battle at Cowpens. But the British General Lord Cornwallis is within a few days' march.

Morgan orders a retreat into North Carolina, hoping to link up with General Nathanael Greene and the bulk of the Continental Army.

The Race to the River Dan has begun.

January 18, 1781. Cowpens, South Carolina.

Did you catch the British, Colonel?

No, Dick. I'm afraid they got away.

I've got you some boots.

Thanks. I need 'em. Were they just lying around the field?

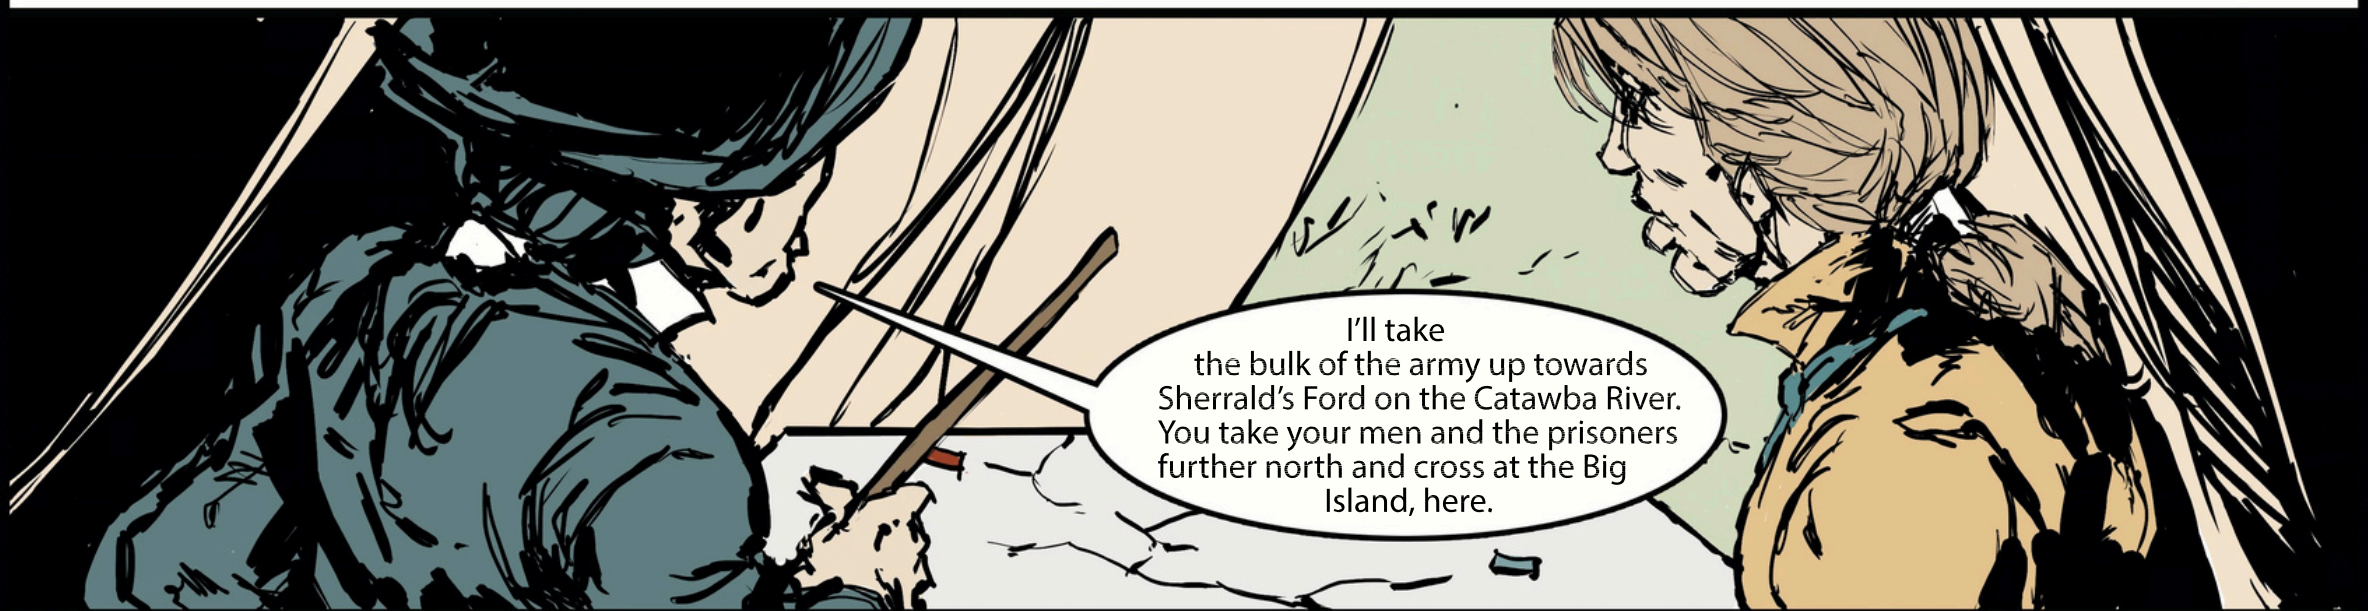

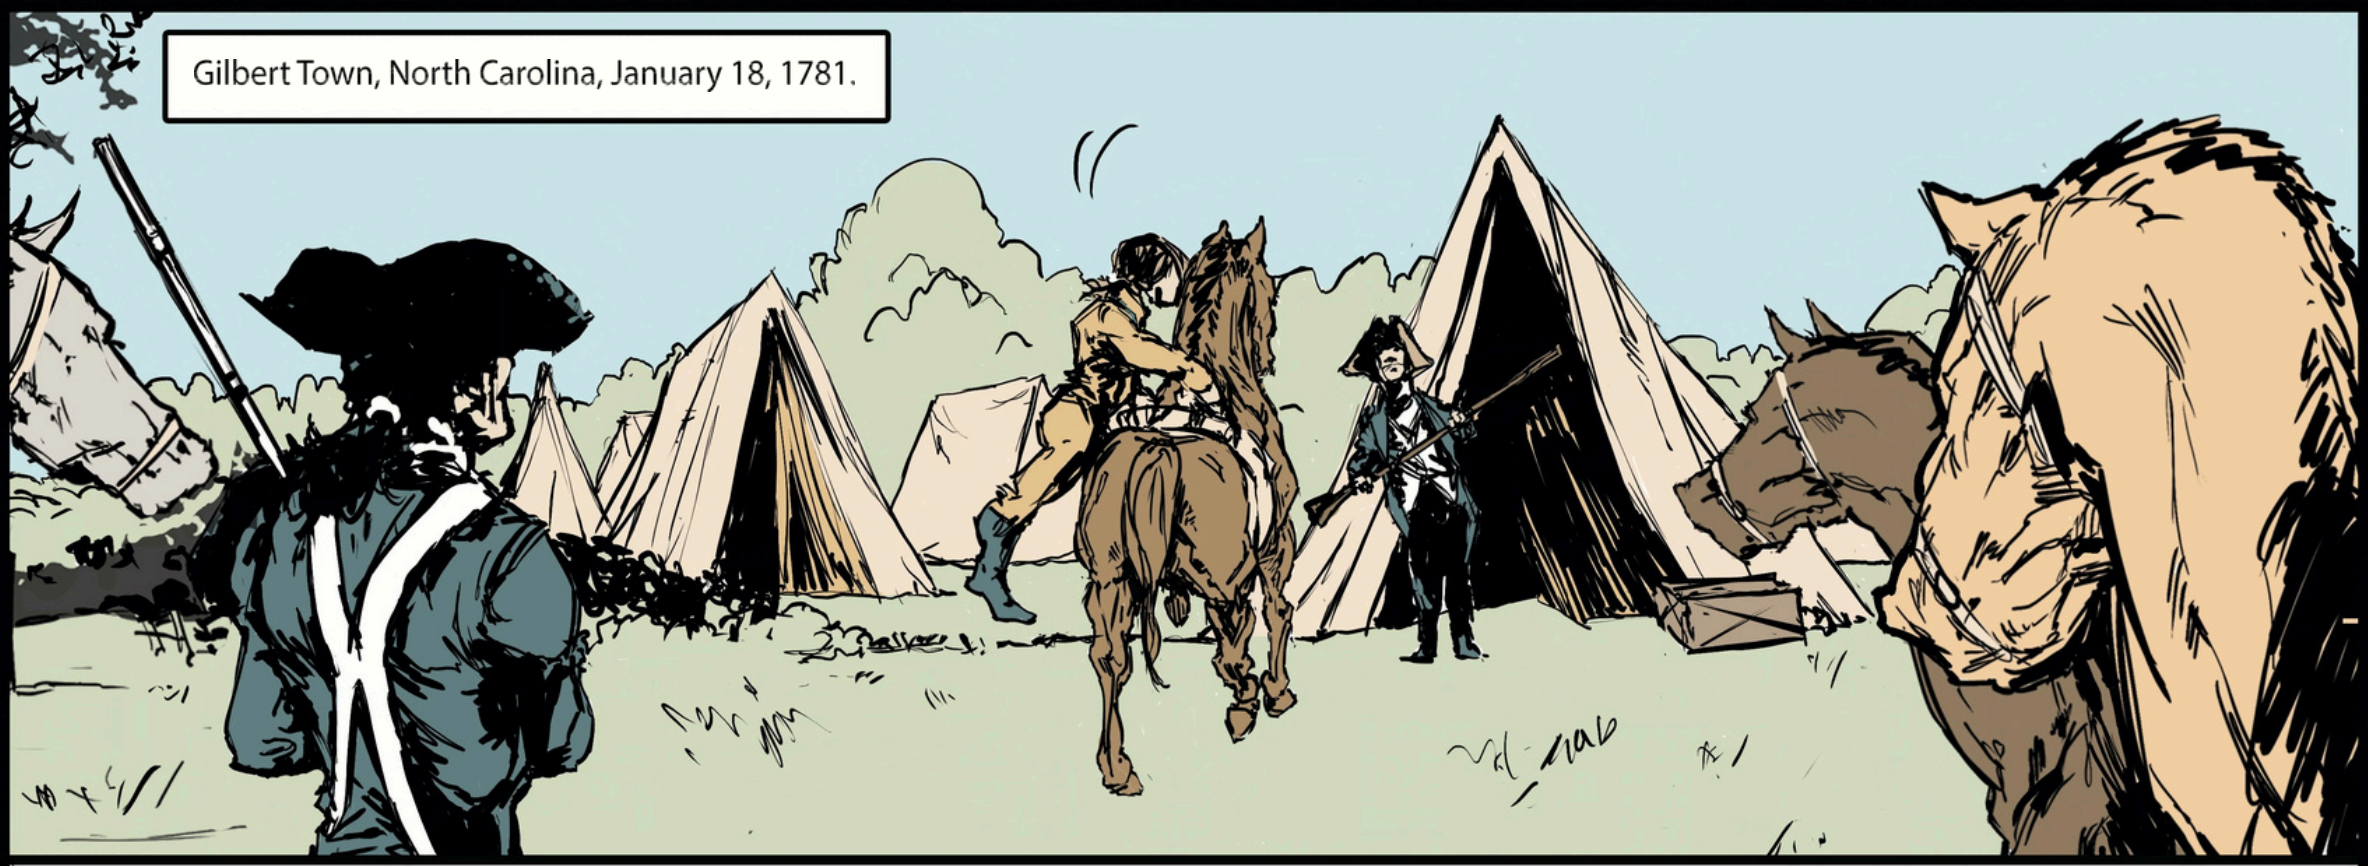

A British officer wasn't going to use them anymore.

Is he among the prisoners?

Uh....no, sir.

It sounds like there's a story there. Tell me later. We've got to catch up to General Morgan.

Gilbert Town, North Carolina, January 18, 1781.

Where's his Lordship's headquarters?

In the tent, there.

British Headquarters on Turkey Creek in the New Acquisition District of South Carolina.

Lieutenant
Colonel Tarleton is here to see you.

Send him in.

Sir, there was a fight at the Cowpens.

I understand
you fared poorly?

Yes, your Lordship, we were unfortunate.

How many men did we lose?

A lot.

We need to get our men back. We'll catch them before they cross the Catawba, here.

January 19, 1781.

We'll head to Ramseur's Mill.

As we get close, find where Morgan is.

On the bright side, sir, we're finally moving into North Carolina.

Yes, sir.

Sergeant major! Let's move out!

Beat the order, march!
